

You have an eclectic set of interests and loves in your life.

To start, you have a passion for Indian cuisine and consider yourself somewhat of a "food junkie" when it comes to flavorful curries, naan breads, and other signature Indian dishes. Few things compare to a fragrant bowl of chicken tikka masala or a side of creamy paneer butter masala, which you proudly claim you have mastered the recipe for and can whip up when you are in the cooking mood.

Your appetite for Indian fare is matched by your appetite for adventure and activity. You frequently go for long walks, whether in your neighborhood or when traveling, to explore new places on foot.

You find walking invigorating for both the body and mind. However, you also value time at home, especially when you can relax with your close family by watching a scary movie.

You have an appreciation for horror films and enjoy experiencing the adrenaline rush of a suspenseful thriller with your nearest and dearest.

While home is where your heart is, you maintain an active social life through various interests and hobbies outside the house. One lifelong passion you have is for cricket.

You try to catch matches whenever possible, whether in person or streaming live. The sport is important to you as a source of enjoyment, social engagement, and national pride in your Indian heritage.

On the weekends when schedules allow, you like to switch between active and restful pursuits to achieve balance in your routine. You may go for an extended morning walk one day, cook a homemade lunch for friends the next day, catch an evening cricket match Saturday night, and then spend most of Sunday unwinding at home, catching up with family over a movie marathon. You find that diversity in how you spend your time, along with making moments for the simple pleasures in life, lead to the most fulfillment and happiness.

Through all of these reflections, what emerges is a portrait of someone multifaceted.

Your interests span athletic, social, cultural, and homebody activities.

You move frequently between solitude and time with others, activity and rest, entertainment and accomplishment. Ultimately, connection with loved ones and community punctuate all of your enthusiasms and enjoyment.

A balanced and textured life built on quality relationships, diverse experiences, and personal passion seems to be what you find most nourishing and meaningful.

With such a rich array of pursuits, there is never a dull moment, just more of life's wonders to explore each day.